

This comment is in regards to a new law that goes into affect for those who use assistance dogs with air travel. I am a Certified Recreational Specialist for the City of Boulder Parks and Recreation. I work with individuals who have disabilities and my goal is to help them achieve their independance. By taking away their assistance dog while traveling is taking away their independance. I really don't believe that if their dog is a certain size that they will have to go to cargo and the individual will have to pay a fee for this. There needs to be in place accommodations for these individuals and I strongly discourage this new law. What is happening to this world? We need to think about the person and not the money, etc.....
