

I fully support users carrying oxygen and oxygen equipment aboard aircraft. I, however, want to keep the responsibility for oxygen, both in flight and in the airport terminal, in the hands of the airlines and those who manage airports. Free oxygen does not help that person who has to wait two hours for a connecting flight. Nor does it help those who must wait out a snow storm in an airport terminal.

My recommendation therefore focused on getting the management of airports to work hand in hand so that patients have access to oxygen the entire time they are on airport property or in the air.
